

The End of All Flesh

An excerpt from Dragon's Blood #5: The Adversary

Pairika - Ewa Borowska

„After the primordial light was withdrawn there was created 'a membrane for the marrow,' a k'lifah husk or shell, and this k'lifah expanded and produced another, who was Lilith."
- Zohar

Lilith is a dark form of the feminine Self encountered in many mythologies, from the Sumerian, Babylonian and Assyrian, to such cultures as the Hebrew or Teutonic. Originally a night demon haunting both men and women at night and causing erotic dreams, throughout ages she has become a witch, a vampire, a hag, and a personification of all that is viewed as evil, impure, dark, and feared. She is Adam's first wife and the first female in the world. Later on she becomes the wife of Samael the Devil and Ashmodai. She is the Queen of Sheba and Zemargad. In some sources it is her who becomes the female of Leviathan. And finally, she is even the consort of God himself in the absence of Shekhina. Lilith's energy is that of the night, dark and fiery. She appears in dreams, ruling the first astral level on the Qabalistic Tree of Night, the Gamaliel qlipha. She is the dark feminine aspect of the Self, the feminine transpersonal shadow - by men experienced as a seductive but violent and fatal succubus, by women as a dark shadow of the Self. The integration of Lilith into one's consciousness is a necessary step on the path towards psychological individuation, or in esoteric terms - to individual self-deification.

Meditation

Visualize that you walk at night through a thick forest. Above you can see a pale moon and the silence around is only sometimes broken by the voice of an owl. Something grasps your leg and you fall on the ground. You can feel something moving underneath and you know it is a living creature. You are paralyzed with fear but after a while you move back and look at the ground where you were lying a moment before. From the ground arises a huge cobra. First it assumes normal size but it grows very quickly and after a while it is as big as a tree. While it is growing, a silver aura starts to surround it. You cannot take your eyes away from it. You are paralyzed again and you look into the reptile's eyes with growing fascination and excitement. Its jaws open and you can see its forked tongue touching you. The cobra is hissing and suddenly you realize that you can understand its language. You declare your magical name and speak the words of greeting: Ho Drakon Ho Megas!

With one quick move the cobra bites you in your forehead, in the place of the third eye. A hole in the ground opens underneath and you fall into a tunnel which leads to the bowels of the earth, into the depths of the unconscious. You do not have a physical body - while falling, it is torn apart by the claws of the dead and spectral wraiths. In front of you there is a blood-red light. You are drawn to this place. After a while you realize that it is a cave which is lit by the glow radiating from a giant blood-red ruby. It lies in the centre of the cave and resembles a strange altar. You come closer to have a look at it and you notice ancient paintings. Most of them depict a beautiful naked woman with reptilian eyes and serpent's tail. You can also see there characters and symbols.

Suddenly you hear a whisper. You turn around and you see a black-haired woman looking at you. She makes a gesture to tell you to come closer, points at the ruby and hands you a dagger. She opens her mouth and speaks the language of the serpents but you can understand her words: "make a sacrifice for our mother Lilith and gaze into the stone." She leaves and you stay alone. You cut your left hand with the dagger and pour the blood on the ruby altar. There you also put the dagger away. You gaze into the jewel and you absorb the visions. The Goddess will show you her seal with which you will be able to find her again in your dreams. When the vision ends, slowly return to your normal consciousness.
